Jason Houge

Algoma, Wisconsin

is a Civil War-era sawmill settlement located on a natural harbor on the western shore of Lake Michigan, about a 40 minute drive east of the city of Green Bay. The lake has always been essential to the town and is the primary reason it exists. In Fred Neuschel's book about the early Christmas tree shipping industry on Lake Michigan, Lives and Legends of the Christmas Tree Ships, the description of Algoma is that of a town that relied heavily on the resources and transportation routes of Lake Michigan. Today, the lake is still important to the community as Algoma is widely known to have one of the largest sport fishing fleets on the Great Lakes. Sport fishing is one of the main enticements that bring summer tourists into the town.
